Answer Key ............................................................................................................................... 54
Reading, discussing, and sharing literary texts contributes greatly to the development of well-rounded minds. Exposure to diverse forms, characters, and plots set in varied time periods and cultures models for readers how the world works. Literary texts help us learn how people explore, interact, struggle, grow, and solve problems. In short, reading fiction enriches us!

Modern science supports that the human brain is hard-wired for stories. All cultures immerse their children in stories that explain the ways of the world while engaging their emotions. Although many students enjoy reading fiction, navigating the wide variety of rich literary texts poses challenges for evolving readers. Students may lack sufficient vocabulary or background knowledge to follow along. Some literary forms or features may be puzzling at first. This is why exposing students more frequently to complex literary texts and introducing them to active reading-comprehension strategies are now key components of successful reading instruction. Useful strategies, clearly taught, can empower readers to approach literary texts purposefully, closely, and independently. Such active tools provide students with a foundation for success not only in school, but for the rest of their lives.

Text Marking: A Powerful Active-Reading Strategy

To improve their comprehension of complex literary texts, students must actively engage with the material. Careful and consistent text marking by hand is one valuable way to accomplish this. To begin with, by numbering paragraphs, students can readily identify the location of useful narrative details when discussing a piece. By circling main characters, underlining pertinent clues to setting or sequence, and boxing key vocabulary, students interact directly with the material, making it more digestible in the process. But the true goal of teaching text marking is to help students internalize an effective close-reading strategy, not to have them show how many marks they can make on a page.

Purposeful text marking intensifies readers’ focus. It helps them identify narrative elements as they read and recognize and isolate key details or connect relevant ideas presented in the text. For instance, boxing words like first, then, next, and finally can clarify the sequence of ideas or events in a passage. By underlining expressions like the trouble is or one answer is, students learn to identify conflicts and their resolutions. When students are asked to compare and contrast elements in a passage, boxing signal words and phrases, such as both, but, or however, can make identifying similarities and differences more apparent. Words like since, because, and as a result signal cause-and-effect relationships that structure a piece. Furthermore, the physical act of writing by hand, in itself, helps students not only process what they read, but remember it as well.
About the Passages

The 20 reproducible passages in this book, which vary by genre, form, purpose, tone, and task, address ten key reading-comprehension skills, from identifying character, point of view, setting, and key events and details, to sequencing, making inferences, and using context clues to unlock the meaning of unfamiliar words or phrases. Consult the Table of Contents to see the scope of skills, genres, forms, and Lexile scores of the passages. The Lexile scores fall within the ranges recommended for fifth graders. (The scores for grade 5, revised to reflect the more rigorous demands of today’s higher standards, range from 830 to 1010. This range addresses the variety commonly seen in typical fifth grade classrooms.) Note: The poem on page 46 does not include a Lexile score because poetry is excluded from Lexile measurements.

Each passage appears on its own page, beginning with the title, the genre or form of the passage, and the main comprehension skill the passage addresses. All passages include illustrations. Some include common text elements, such as capital letters used for emphasis and captions.

The passages are stand-alone texts that can be used in any order you choose. Feel free to assign passages to individuals, pairs, small groups, or the entire class, as best suits your teaching style. However, it’s a good idea to preview each passage before you assign it to ensure that your students have the skills needed to complete it successfully. (See the next page for a close-reading routine to model for students.)

Reading-Comprehension Question Pages

Following each passage is a reproducible “Do More” page of text-dependent comprehension questions: two are multiple-choice questions that call for a single response and a brief, text-based explanation to justify that choice. The other two questions are open-response items. The questions address a range of comprehension strategies and skills. All questions share the goal of ensuring that students engage in close reading of the text, grasp its key ideas, and provide text-based evidence to support their answers. Keep additional paper on hand so students have ample space to write complete and thorough answers.

Answer Key

An Answer Key (pages 54–63) includes annotated versions of each marked passage and sample answers to its related questions. Maintain flexibility in assessing student responses, as some markings and answers to open-response questions may vary. (Because students are likely to mark different places in the text for particular skills, the annotated versions in the Answer Key highlight a variety of possible responses.) Encourage students to self-assess and revise their answers as you review the text markings together. This approach encourages discussion, comparison, extension, reinforcement, and correlation to other reading skills.
Teaching Routine for Close Reading and Purposeful Text Marking

Any text can become more accessible to readers who have learned to bring various strategies, such as purposeful text marking, to the reading process. Here is one suggested routine that may be effective in your classroom.

Preview

- Engage prior knowledge of the topic of the piece and its genre. Help students link it to similar topics or examples of the genre they may have read.
- Identify the reading skill for which students will be marking the text. Display or distribute the Comprehension Skill Summary Card that applies to the passage. Go over its key ideas. (See Comprehension Skill Summary Cards, pages 8, 10–12, for more.)

Model (for the first passage, to familiarize students with the process)

- Display the passage using an interactive whiteboard, document camera, or other resource, and provide students with their own copy. Preview the text with students by having them read the title and look at any illustrations or other graphic elements.
- Draw attention to the markings students will use to enhance their understanding of the piece. Link the text marking box to the Comprehension Skill Summary Card for clarification.
- Read aloud the passage as students follow along. Guide students to think about the skill and to write any questions they may have on sticky-notes.
- Mark the text together. Begin by numbering the paragraphs. Then discuss the choices you make when marking the text, demonstrating and explaining how the various text elements support the skill. Check that students understand how to mark the text using the various icons and graphics shown in the text marking box.

Read

- Display the passage for a shared reading experience. Do a quick-read of the passage together to familiarize students with it. Then read it together a second time, pausing as necessary to answer questions, draw connections, or clarify words as needed. Then read the passage once more, this time with an eye to the text features described in the text marking box.
- Invite students to offer ideas for additional markings. These might include noting unfamiliar vocabulary, an idiom or phrase they may not understand, or an especially interesting, unusual, or important detail they want to remember. Model how to use sticky-notes, colored pencils, highlighters, question marks, or check marks.

Respond

- Have students read the passage independently. This fourth reading is intended to allow students to mark the text themselves. It will also prepare them to discuss the piece and offer their views about it.
- Have students answer the questions on the companion Do More page. Depending on the abilities of your students, you might read aloud the questions to them, and then have them answer orally. Model how to look back at the text markings and other text evidence for assistance. This will help students provide complete and supported responses.
Comprehension Skill Summary Cards

To help students review the ten reading-comprehension skills this book addresses and the specific terms associated with each, have them use the ten reproducible Comprehension Skill Summary Cards (pages 10–12). The boldface terms on each card are the same ones students will identify as they mark the text.

You might duplicate, cut out, and distribute a particular Comprehension Skill Summary Card before assigning a passage that focuses on that skill. Discuss the elements of the skill together to ensure that students fully grasp it. Encourage students to save and collect the cards, which they can use as a set of reading aids whenever they read any type of literary text. Or display the cards in a reading center in your classroom that is available at all times.

Tips and Suggestions

- The text-marking process is versatile and adaptable. While numbering, boxing, circling, and underlining are the most common methods, you can personalize the strategy for your class if it helps augment the process. You might have students use letters or numbers to mark text; they can, for example, write MC to indicate a main character, D to mark a detail, or 1st for first-person point of view and 3rd for third-person. Whichever technique you use, encourage consistency of marking.
- You may wish to extend the text-marking strategy by having students identify other aspects of writing, such as figurative language or confusing words, expressions, or idioms. Moreover, you can invite students to write their own notes and questions in the margins.

Point of View

Knowing who is telling a story gives you its point of view. What you learn in the story comes through that point of view. Authors usually use one of two points of view.

- First-person point of view has a character in the story telling it. In first-person stories, readers learn about events from that character’s point of view. Look for words like I, me, and we.
- Third-person point of view has someone outside the story telling it. That person is the narrator. In third-person stories, readers learn the thoughts, actions, and feelings of many characters. Look for words like he, she, and they.

Authors often discuss people, places, things, or ideas by describing how they are alike and ways they differ.

- To compare means to tell how two or more things are alike.
- To contrast means to tell how two or more things are different.
- Comparing and contrasting help you understand a story’s ideas, its plot, its characters, and its message.
- Signal words give clues that help you compare and contrast. (Examples for comparing: both, too, like, also, and in the same way. Examples for contrasting: but, only, however, unlike, and different.)
Connections to the Standards

The lessons in this book support the College and Career Readiness Anchor Standards for Reading for students in grades K–12. These broad standards, which serve as the basis of many state standards, were developed to establish rigorous educational expectations with the goal of providing students nationwide with a quality education that prepares them for college and careers. The chart below details how the lessons align with specific reading standards for literary texts for students in grade 5.

These materials also address language standards, including skills in the conventions of standard English, knowledge of language, and vocabulary acquisition and use. In addition, students meet writing standards as they answer questions about the passages, demonstrating their ability to convey ideas coherently, clearly, and with support from the text.

Comprehension Skill

Character

Characters take part in the events of the story. A character can be a person, an animal, or a thing.
- Read for details that describe each character.
- Notice differences among characters so you can tell them apart.
- Notice whether and how a character changes or learns during the story.
A story may have a main character and one or more minor characters.
- The main character is the most important character in the story.
- A minor character is not the focus of the story.

Comprehension Skill

Point of View

Knowing who is telling a story gives you its point of view. What you learn in the story comes through that point of view. Authors usually use one of two points of view.
- First-person point of view has a character in the story telling it. In first-person stories, readers learn about events from that character's point of view. Look for words like I, me, and we.
- Third-person point of view has someone outside the story telling it. That person is the narrator. In third-person stories, readers learn the thoughts, actions, and feelings of many characters. Look for words like he, she, and they.

Comprehension Skill

Setting/Mood

The setting of a story tells where and when the story takes place. The setting can help create the mood or feeling of the story.
Read for details that tell where a story takes place.
- It can be a real place.
- It can be an imaginary place.
Read for details that tell when a story takes place.
- It might be set in the present (now).
- It might be set in the past (long ago).
- It might be set in the future (years from now).

Comprehension Skill

Key Events & Details

Events are the actions or things that happen in a story. The events build interest and move the story along. But not all events have the same effect on the story.
As you read, think about which actions or things are key events and which are details.
- A key event is important to the theme or big idea of the story.
- Details tell more about a key event. Details may answer questions, such as Who? Where? What? When? Why? or How?
Sequence of Events

In most stories, events happen in a certain order or sequence. Some events happen in the beginning of the story. Other things happen in the middle. The story finishes with events that happen at the end.

- As you read, think about the sequence of events. This helps you follow the story. Picture the events in your mind to help you remember the sequence.
- Signal words give clues about the sequence of events. (Examples: before, first, second, next, then, now, later, after, and finally; as well as specific dates and times.)

Conflict & Resolution

Good stories have a plot. The plot is the set of key events that move the story along. Most stories present a problem and how it gets solved. This relationship is called conflict and resolution.

- A conflict is a form of trouble, problem, or disagreement.
- A resolution is the way the conflict gets solved.
- Signal words are clues to a conflict and its resolution. (Examples for conflicts: question, challenge, dilemma, puzzle, need, and trouble. Examples for resolutions: answer, result, idea, plan, reason, solution, solve, improve, and fix.)

Context Clues

Authors may use words you may not know. But nearby words or sentences can offer clues about the meaning of an unknown word.

- Context refers to all the words and sentences around an unknown word.
- Context clues are hints that can help you figure out a word’s meaning. As you read, search for related words, such as synonyms, antonyms, explanations, or examples in nearby text. Link these clues to the unknown word to understand it.

Compare & Contrast

Authors often discuss people, places, things, or ideas by describing how they are alike and ways they differ.

- To compare means to tell how two or more things are alike.
- To contrast means to tell how two or more things are different.
- Comparing and contrasting help you understand a story’s ideas, its plot, its characters, and its message.
- Signal words give clues that help you compare and contrast. (Examples for comparing: both, too, like, also, and in the same way. Examples for contrasting: but, only, however, unlike, and different.)
Comprehension Skill

Make Inferences

Authors may hint at an idea without stating it directly. But they usually include enough detail so readers can use what they already know about a topic to “read between the lines” and figure out a hidden message.

- Text clues are words or details that help you figure out an unstated idea.
- You make an inference by combining text clues with what you already know to form a likely conclusion, or “educated guess.”

Comprehension Skill

Summarize

As you read, check that you understand and can recall the key elements of a story. Think about how to retell the important parts in your own words. Leave out minor details and get to the point.

- The topic or theme of a story is its focus—what it is mainly about.
- Key details add more information and support the story’s theme.
- A summary briefly restates the theme using only the key details. A good summary is short, clear, and tells only what is most important.

Text Passages
Fishing With Grandpa Leon

Read the realistic fiction.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

Ronan was beside himself with excitement. He was ten years old and his Grandpa Leon was finally going to take him fishing. Grandpa Leon claimed to be “a fishing expert, practically a professional angler.” He told Ronan that he’d caught giant marlin and huge tuna, and that he had many adventurous stories to tell. He promised he’d supply all the fishing gear: rods, reels, hooks, bait, buckets, and plenty of food, too. All Ronan had to do was to be ready promptly at 6 AM.

As it happened, it was good Grandpa Leon brought plenty of food because grandfather and grandson had plenty of time to eat it. The fish simply weren’t biting. “They’re napping,” he informed Ronan, knowingly.

No nibbles left plenty of time for Grandpa Leon’s elaborate fish stories. In fact, it was during one of those tall tales that Ronan suddenly felt a sharp tug on his line. “I’ve got something really huge!” he shouted.

“How tight, I’ll help,” Grandpa Leon replied, reaching over and grabbing the rod. Together, they tugged on the line that held what promised to be a colossal, prize-winning fish. Finally, they reeled in their catch—a tattered leather suitcase, heavy with sand.

“How about that, Ronan—the first suitcase of the day!” Grandpa Leon exclaimed, adding, “You can’t say it wasn’t a big catch!”

A Cabin in Syracuse, 1855

Read the historical fiction.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

In the years before the Civil War, some concerned citizens teamed up to assist runaway slaves in their perilous effort to escape bondage. They formed a network of safe houses along the routes north. Elijah’s cabin in Syracuse, New York, was part of this Underground Railroad.

One blustery winter night, the family awoke to frantic rapping at the door. Elijah opened it to see Amos, a friend from nearby Manlius, with two runaways—a young woman and a small girl, both looking terrified and both shivering in drenched, tattered clothes.

“Come, sit by our fire,” said Elijah’s mother, who was welcoming. “I’ll have Elijah get it roaring again, and then I’ll find you some dry clothes and warm food.”

“Oh, thank you kindly, ma’am,” replied the woman as the two runaways entered. “I’m Nola, and we’ve been running hard for days. My little Ruby here is powerful hungry.”

Meanwhile, Elijah listened carefully to his instructions from Amos. “You’ll keep them here two days,” he said gravely. “Best get your hiding space ready, as slave catchers have been spotted nearby.”

Flashing two fingers to signal his mother, Elijah then sat with the guests as they ate and drank heartily. How long had it been since their last meal, he wondered. Whiskers trotted over to meet the strangers. Ruby timidly stroked the furry cat and smiled—possibly for the first time in days.

The Expedition

Read the adventure story. Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

They’d been trapped by ice for 36 days and had been on their own for longer than that, ever since a storm separated them from the ship and the rest of the crew on their expedition. Karl was in a pitiful state—lost, weak, frightened, and shivering from unrelenting cold. He was also suffering the painful effects of frostbite.

Suddenly, ice cracked enough for the boat to break loose and begin to bob gently in the frigid sea. The crew cheered their good fortune. No longer stuck in the ice, their chances of survival had edged up a notch. But Karl understood that the struggles had not ended, as medical supplies were nearly gone and there was barely any food left. If that weren’t terrifying enough, the maps were lost, too.

The crew navigated icy waters until their hands bled and muscles ached. For days, Karl saw nothing in the muted, constant light but other ice floes. Then, finally, he detected a sound in the stillness that he hadn’t heard for months: the cawing of birds. That sweet sound signaled that land was near. All were exhilarated!

The land they found was snow-covered and flat. The crew rowed along its barren coast until they spotted the mouth of a river. Karl and the men entered, presuming it would lead to a village and safety. On they plodded, ever more hopeful of survival.

The Record Setter

Read the humorous story.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

My brother, Alex, is generally considered to be a reliable, clever, thoughtful fellow. I say “generally” because of things like what he’s doing right now.

Picture this and you’ll understand. While I, Nate, sit here playing a video game and texting with half my friends—two perfectly normal things to be doing for amusement—what is he occupied with? Alex is standing over there, counting softly to himself 79, 80, 81, 82… while he repeatedly bats a rubber ball attached by an elastic string to a wooden paddle. This is nonsensical behavior, is it not?

You might think I’m being too hard on Alex, as brothers sometimes can be to one another. On the contrary, I’m being lenient. You see, this time it’s paddle-ball batting, but the last time—and I refer to just a few weeks ago—the challenge was standing on his head for as long as he could, with a timer set up on the rug. Of course, he had to read it upside down, but I suppose he got better at it day by day. Maybe he should’ve put the timer upside down, too.

Frankly, I’m getting a bit concerned. What if one of his goofy pals introduces him to alligator wrestling? Or what if he gets enticed to take up tightrope walking from skyscraper to skyscraper? I tell you, for Alex, these ideas are not too far-fetched!

The water was glistening in the summer’s morning sunlight and the surf was cool on their feet as Krin and Paula happily strolled along the water’s edge. Collecting shells and skimming stones as they went, the brother and sister were having a ball exploring what appeared to be a never-ending beach.

After a while, they stopped and looked back. Their parents and the umbrellas, chairs, and crowds were a long way off. But just ahead, nestled amongst sea grape trees, stood a run-down house. It appeared to be unoccupied; curious, they went to investigate.

The steps creaked as they ascended them, as did the porch when they stepped onto it. The shutters and porch railing were weathered and broken. The front door was ajar so they squeezed through and cautiously entered. The place was in total disarray, chockablock with dust, sand, dead leaves, and overturned, splintered furniture. They’d taken but a few steps when the door unexpectedly slammed shut behind them.

Startled, Krin and Paula spun around. Before they could even utter something like “Uh-oh,” the window shutters clapped closed, too. And if this wasn’t scary enough, the stairs to the second floor squeaked. When a light in the back bedroom flickered, that was absolutely the final straw.

“Let’s get outta here, Paula!” And out they ran, all the way back to those wonderful umbrellas, beach chairs, and crowds.

It had taken us nearly five hours from the river to reach Three-Mile House that hot summer day in the Grand Canyon. We were already tiring from the hike, and knowing that a relentlessly uphill slog still lay ahead, we gratefully rested there.

The trail wound upward through awesome—in the true sense of the word—scenery, rich with spectacular rock formations. The other hikers in the hut, also fatigued from their challenging climbs, seemed in an upbeat mood. Eventually, we gathered our courage to resume the twisting trail to the rim.

Mile-and-a-Half House was our next stopping point, and reaching it was a steady struggle. Our muscles ached, our gusto was diminished, and we were drained upon arrival. After a much-appreciated second rest, longer than our first, we reluctantly began the final leg of our ascent.

The hike was not getting any easier in the heat, and we paused continuously. While wishing the trek were over, we spotted it overhead: an immense monkey face! That’s precisely what the eroded rocks looked like. We excitedly told everyone we passed about where to see Mile-and-a-Quarter Monkey, as we named it. Each hiker gladly promised to keep a lookout for it. Suddenly, amazingly, we felt a renewed bounce in our step. Discovering the giant monkey face had put wings on our feet. Energized, we practically flew out of the canyon, and that was awesome, too.

Medieval Festival

Driving to the Medieval Festival, Mom sang old folksongs while Gavin studied the long list of events. There would be sword classes, blacksmithing, acrobats, dancers, jesters, and more, but it was jousting that was his top priority.

When the two entered the festival grounds, a whirl of sights, sounds, and smells overwhelmed them. Sheep and goats grazed beside horses and mules. The scent of fresh cider perfumed the air while strolling jugglers and musicians entertained the crowds. As Gavin pulled Mom toward the jousting field, he was so busy gawking that he tripped and fell. When he arose, his mother was gone and his body felt unusually heavy. Yikes! He was wearing a full suit of armor!

“Sir, your steed awaits!” announced a man in a cloak, directing Gavin toward the stable. Too stunned to protest, Gavin clanked along, huffing under the armor’s weight.

“I think you’re mistaken,” Gavin sputtered.

“Not so!” replied the squire. “Queen Mab commands you to replace Sir Harry, who broke his arm yesterday. Ride proudly to honor her!”

Gavin gulped, feeling equally confused and thrilled at this crazy turn of events. He’d wanted to see a joust, but to actually participate in one? Zounds!

The squire paraded Gavin and his horse into position and handed him the long pole. Across the field was his fierce opponent, fully armored and ready…

Block Party Celebrity

Newly moved in and eager to meet their neighbors, the Guerrero family had a great idea. They would serve Rosa’s delicious elote, a favorite savory dip made with corn and cheese, at the block party.

They set up their table in front of their house, located at the quiet end of the block, far from the busy avenue. The family was in a jovial mood as they set up aluminum trays of elote, tortilla chips, plastic bowls, forks, and napkins.

Despite the appealing aroma of corn, few people strolled over, distracted by temptations elsewhere on the block. With few neighbors to serve, Ms. Guerrero permitted Yimi and Luisa to explore. When they returned, ice creams in hand, a commotion grabbed their attention. It was the town’s mayor, Elena Carillo-Lopez, and her entourage. They had arrived at the Guerrero’s end of the block.

The mayor stopped first at their table, smiling warmly as Luisa heaped elote into a bowl, added some chips, a fork, and served it with a napkin.

“Holy guacamole, your elote is the best!” the mayor exclaimed, glowing with each mouthful.

Rosa blushed, saying, “Gracias, señora.”

Well, that did it. It seemed now that everybody else made a bee-line to the Guerrero table for elote. They were newcomers no longer.

Painted Sneakers

Packing my van by 7 AM gives me time to get to the lake for this autumn’s crafts market. The winding drive will be lovely, as will the reunions with my fellow craftspeople, folks I see once a year.

Before coffee and chit-chat, I set up my booth. First, I assemble the lightweight aluminum poles that frame my protective canopy. After all, the market takes place come rain or shine. Then I set up my tables and racks to hold my one-of-a-kind, hand-painted sneakers. I put my most popular superhero and cartoon pairs on racks so their designs attract customers. Next, I set out other items—wild laces, goofy flip-flops, hair ornaments—neatly in trays. After that, I set out an album showing all my designs for customers to flip through, and a sign-up book for people who want to get on my mailing list.

Customers start arriving by 11 AM, so everything must be ready. My last task is to activate and test my wi-fi payment machine so I can accept cash and credit cards. At that point, my sneakers and I are prepared for the market to open.

I stand most of the day—wearing my favorite sneakers—but rarely feel tired. Most shoppers are friendly and curious, which encourages me to tell more about my work. Occasionally, I slip away for a quick snack. Once in a while, I even sit down...! At 6 PM, when the market closes, I pack, load my van, and return home.

The Relief Pitcher

Wilson is clearly in trouble—he has walked two batters in a row, has been taking too much time between pitches, and looks weary. Recognizing this, the team’s manager and pitching coach exchange worried glances and confer softly. The coach picks up the phone in the dugout to call the bullpen coach, step 1 in the relief-pitching process.

Next, there is action in the bullpen behind left field. Two pitchers, a righty and a lefty, get up. After doing a series of gentle stretches, each hurler grabs his glove, stands on a mound, and begins to toss the ball softly to his catcher. After briefly warming up, both relievers start throwing harder, expecting that one of them will likely be called into the game.

Then there is more trouble for Wilson. Another walk draws the manager from his perch by the dugout railing. He’s had enough. On his way to the mound, he waves his left hand, signaling the bullpen. Seeing this, the lefty stops throwing, opens the bullpen gate, and jogs to the mound to replace Wilson.

When the manager reaches the mound, he takes the ball from the struggling pitcher, who leaves the field with his head down. Next, the manager greets the incoming reliever, and gives him the ball and some encouragement. Finished, the manager trots back to the dugout, hoping he’s made the right choice.

Krishna’s Lesson

Read the legend from India.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

Though small and gentle, young Krishna had great wisdom bestowed upon him by Lord Vishnu. In those days, Krishna lived in Vrindavan. Each year, the people there made offerings to Indra, the fierce ruler of clouds and rain, hoping to soothe Indra’s temper. Krishna clearly recognized that Indra was neither generous nor sincere; he was selfish and arrogant, unworthy of respect.

To teach Indra a lesson, Krishna addressed the people. “Indra is a bully we need not serve. Instead, it makes more sense to worship Govardhan, our mountain that supports us. Let us honor kind Govardhan, who selflessly shares her lush forests and urges the clouds to shower us.” The people approved Krishna’s solution.

Indra flew into a mighty rage. “These farmers ignore me to worship a mountain on the advice of a child? I shall severely punish this insult,” he thundered. Indra ordered the clouds to send furious winds and driving rains to Vrindavan. The tempest terrified the people, who fearfully sought help from young Krishna.

With supreme calm, grace, and power, Krishna lifted Govardhan into the air using only the little finger of his left hand. He steadfastly held the mountain like an umbrella, protecting Vrindavan for seven stormy days and nights.

Finally, Indra acknowledged his error. He halted the storm and deeply apologized to Krishna. Thus did humans learn not to give in to disaster.

Ms. Spira, the music teacher, was nearly finished auditioning hopefuls for the upcoming talent show. She announced to the two remaining candidates that there was just one spot left to fill, which caused Tameka and Kai to glance nervously at each other across the room. Tameka, a talented dancer, hoped to show off her technique and style in the show, while Kai, a gifted pianist, dreamed of becoming a professional musician and wanted this opportunity to perform. Though each hoped desperately to be selected, that seemed impossible now, with only two more try-outs for one opening.

Kai moved beside Tameka. “I know you’re an awesome dancer, and you know I’m great on the piano. Too bad we’ve got to battle each other,” he whispered.

“Oh, that’s kind to say, but one of us is simply going to be disappointed,” Tameka answered.

Kai asked, “What music are you dancing to?” Tameka replied that she planned to dance to the hit, “Sweet, Fleet Feet.” Kai originally planned to play a classical waltz by Frederic Chopin. But he also knew “Sweet, Fleet Feet” and could play it energetically, so he suggested something to Tameka that made her grin.

Then Ms. Spira turned to Tameka and Kai to ask, “Who’s next?”

“Both of us—we’ve become a team!” they responded. The friends chattered as they went onto the stage. “May we please have a few moments to warm up?” Tameka politely asked.

The Unlucky Lizard

Read the African-American folktale.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

Ages back, Lizard and Frog both sat upright like dogs. Then came the day that things changed forever for Lizard. The pair were strolling along a dusty trail near their swamp. Around a bend they noticed a lush green field with a clear blue pond. They hankered for a visit, but a sturdy wooden fence blocked the way.

“I’d surely love a swim in that sweet water,” said Frog longingly.

“I’d surely love to catch some fine insects there,” pined Lizard.

So the two approached the fence, which seemed to grow taller and more threatening with each step. To make things worse, the fence boards fit snugly together and were buried deep in the ground. They saw no possibility to clamber over nor dig under.

Frog and Lizard sat upright like dogs by that frustrating fence, pondering how to get to the other side. Then Frog spied a thin crevice near the ground. “I’m gonna squeeze myself through,” he announced. So he shoved and squirmed and wriggled until he popped out on the other side!

“Your turn, Lizard,” Frog hollered. So Lizard scuttled to the crack. He pressed and squashed and struggled to get through. He pushed so hard that a fence board tumbled and flattened him. After that, Lizard never again sat like a dog, but could only slither close to the ground.

Frog and Lizard remained friends despite Lizards’ flatter appearance.

The Shipwreck

Read the fable, adapted from Aesop. Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

Long ago, when dolphins were friendly toward humans, shipwrecked sailors often told of being rescued by holding onto a dolphin’s back for a ride to shore. Also at that time, ships commonly carried animal mascots, like monkeys, who were known to be smart, entertaining companions, and good at mimicking the sailors.

One stormy night near Athens, Greece, a ship broke apart, dumping its sailors into the sea. Struggling, they grabbed onto anything they could to stay afloat. Emulating them, the monkey clung to an oar. A dolphin swimming past, mistaking the monkey for a sailor, invited him to climb onto her back and grasp her tightly while she carried him to land. She politely asked, “Are you from Greece?”

“Yes, my family is from Athens,” replied the monkey.

“You sound like a well-educated person,” said the dolphin respectfully. So the monkey began to regale her with fantastical tales; but all were lies. Soon the dolphin interrupted the monkey’s yammering to indicate land on the horizon.

“As an Athenian,” the dolphin said, “you must surely know Piraeus.”

“Naturally!” the monkey replied. “Piraeus is my father’s first cousin, whom we visit often because he is our favorite relative.”

Knowing that Piraeus was the port nearest Athens, the dolphin realized the monkey was an imposter. So she dove under the waves, letting the monkey swim on his own, and sought an honest man to save.

Room and Bored

Luckily, Kenji has his own bedroom, but he had outgrown it. About to enter middle school, why would he want a room with a kiddie desk and dinosaur curtains? With that in mind, Kenji asked his parents if he could bring his room up to speed. To his delight, they agreed, and together they examined the room with an eye for how they could renovate it.

The bed was the first thing to go, replaced by a bunk bed for sleepover guests. Its comforter, decorated with cartoon animals, also had to go. “Soccer balls might be better,” Kenji suggested. His mother agreed to shop for different curtains, too.

Similarly, the tiny desk had outlived its use; a new computer station would provide a welcome contrast. The water color paintings on the wall, which he’d made in third grade, also had to go, along with the pirate toy chest. Rather, he’d hang up pictures of tennis players he admired and get a bookcase.

On the other hand, Kenji was content with his room’s pale green color. “That’s the same color as the seats at the stadium,” he explained. And the rug was okay, he thought, despite its stains.

When the upgrade was completed, the change in the character of the room was apparent. At peace in his more mature environment, Kenji felt ready for his new school.

The Chapman Stick

Read the music story.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

At the music museum, I got to see new and ancient instruments from around the world. They were all quite fascinating! Then I learned that there was going to be a demonstration of a special instrument called a Chapman Stick.

“Good afternoon,” said a musician. “Please welcome my band.” I was puzzled, because he was by himself. There weren’t any other band members on stage beside him. He held something that looked like a guitar, only it didn’t have a body. The entire instrument consisted of just a fretboard, which was wider and longer than a guitar’s fretboard. It had more strings than a guitar, too.

He plugged the Chapman Stick into an electric amplifier, just like a guitar. Then he began to play. I couldn’t believe my ears. I was amazed by all the different sounds the Chapman Stick could make. The instrument sounded like a guitar, a piano, a bass, and a drum, all at the same time. I enjoyed hearing the musician play full songs all by himself.

I wish I had a Chapman Stick. I could be a one-boy band. I know what I’m requesting for my birthday this year!

Have You Ever Seen?

Read the poem. Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

Have you ever seen a sheet on a river bed?
Or a single hair from a hammer’s head?
Has the foot of a mountain any toes?
And is there a pair of garden hose?

Does the needle ever wink its eye?
Why doesn't the wing of a building fly?
Can you tickle the ribs of a parasol?
Or open the trunk of a tree at all?

Are the teeth of a rake ever going to bite?
Have the hands of a clock any left or right?
Can the garden plot be deep and dark?
And what is the sound of a birch’s bark?

And when you add on the six months or more it will take to get there and the same to return, we’d be away from home and friends for three years—or longer! It’ll be 2051 when we finally get back, and I’ll be sixteen already!”

“But Rashid, just think of the advantages, not the least of which is how much time we’ll spend together as a family.”

Unconvinced, Rashid responded, “Mom, taking this trip is not only unappealing, but probably unhealthy, too. We’ll be exposed to deep-space radiation. Plus, life in that planet’s low-gravity environment might be too weird. For instance, what will we do for entertainment? I don’t expect we’ll find swimming pools, hockey rinks, or restaurants!”

Rashid’s mother knew all this, but she was passionate about going, believing that after preparation and study, they could meet each potential challenge. “Just think how exciting it would be, darling,” she replied, “an experience like no other. How can I encourage you to be as excited as I am about this chance for adventure?”

“I’m not that excited to bring back Martian microbes, Mom. Can I go to hockey practice now?”

Read the Chinese creation myth.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

At first, the universe was jumbled inside a huge egg. That murky chaos contained all forms of opposites, or yin and yang. In the whirling mixture were water and fire, night and day, north and south, and so on. And there was Pangu, the being who would one day create our world.

Pangu slept inside the egg of chaos for 18,000 years. During that time, the yin and yang of all things was tangled together. He separated the heavier yin from the lighter yang. The yang floated up to become the sky while the yin settled to become the earth.

Standing between the two parts, Pangu’s head touched sky and his feet strode upon earth. Over the next 18,000 years, sky and earth grew ever more vast, moving apart by ten feet each day.

Pangu also grew, keeping sky and earth separated. By the time of his death, earth and sky had settled into their places. One of Pangu’s eyes became the sun, the other the moon. His breath became wind and clouds; his voice turned into the sound of thunder. Pangu’s body formed great mountains and his blood its flowing waters. His veins became roads and his muscles fertile fields. His hairs remained in the sky as glittering stars.

Read the tall tale from the American Midwest.
Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

You’ve probably tasted the popular American popcorn ball. You might imagine some cook thinking to use syrup to stick popcorn together into a tasty snack. Well, that’s NOT how popcorn balls came to be, at least according to old Febold Feboldson. He claimed that the popcorn ball invented itself during the weird summer of 1874.

Midwestern farmers called that growing season The Year of Striped Weather. That’s because it alternated rainy and hot, not day by day, but by sections of cropland. Fields grew in stripes: first you’d see a mile-wide stripe of crops wilting in the broiling heat, then a mile-wide stripe of waterlogged crops soaking nearly to death.

Febold Feboldson had this situation on his farm. He grew corn in the Dismal River valley and sugar cane on the hills above. One day the sun baked his corn plants so hot that the kernels popped, causing a yellow blizzard. Meanwhile, the rain was drenching his sugar cane stalks so badly that the syrup inside washed out and rolled toward the popcorn. A ball soon formed, growing gigantic as it tumbled along. Febold estimated the giant popcorn ball at about two hundred feet wide!

His neighbor, Bert Bergstrom, witnessed this eye-popping event. Bert offered to help Febold corral the great popcorn ball to impress visitors. But just then, a swarm of hungry grasshoppers devoured the entire very-first popcorn ball.

Passage 1: Fishing With Grandpa Leon

1. D; Sample answer: I picked D because it’s the only answer that makes sense, and I found a context clue in the first paragraph.

2. A; Sample answer: I picked A because Grandpa Leon seems upbeat and hopeful about the fishing trip.

3. Sample answer: I think Ronan would say that the trip had many long boring stretches because the fish weren’t biting, but he was entertained by Grandpa Leon’s stories and did enjoy making the first “catch.”

4. Sample answer: He acted as if the suitcase itself was a prized catch, and didn’t seem the least bit disappointed.

Passage 2: A Cabin in Syracuse, 1855

1. D; Sample answer: I picked D because I could tell that the story was told in the third person.

2. B; Sample answer: I picked B because I understood in paragraph 1 that slavery was what the runaways were trying to escape.

3. Sample answer: I think Elijah is against slavery and is brave enough to offer help to the desperate runaway slaves. He is caring, determined, and helpful.

4. Sample answer: The opening paragraph provides some historical background about the time and place where the story is set.
Passage 3: The Expedition

4. Sample answer: I think the story takes place in a very cold climate, perhaps in the Arctic Sea, because there is ice, frozen for long stretches, barren lands, and near-constant light.

Passage 4: The Record Setter

3. Sample answer: Although Alex may do things that Nate finds peculiar, Alex probably has no intention of taking up alligator wrestling or tightrope walking.

4. Sample answer: Alex might poke fun at Nate for all the time he wastes on video games and texting with his friends.
Passage 5: The Beach House

1. C; Sample answer: I picked C because I could tell that it is written in third person (he, they), and it probably wasn’t told by a ghost.

2. B; Sample answer: I picked B because according to the description, the inside of the house is crowded with lots of stuff.

3. Sample answer: I think the haunted house scared them a lot, which made them grateful to be safely back among their parents and the crowds on the beach.

4. Sample answer: The story is set on a long beach on a summer morning. At first, the mood is pleasant as the two happy strollers are enjoying a lovely, relaxing day. The mood turns more creepy and scary when the pair enters a vacant house that unexpectedly seems haunted.

Passage 6: Mile-and-a-Quarter Monkey

1. C; Sample answer: I picked C since the hikers were in a grumpy mood because they were so hot and tired, even though they were having a great hike.

2. B; Sample answer: I picked B because I gathered from the story that the hike, also called a trek, was strenuous and exhausting, much like a lengthy hike in snow.

3. Sample answer: The hikers walked in the hot summer heat on a trail that was steep, winding, and exhausting, much like a lengthy hike in snow.

4. Sample answer: Noticing a rock formation that looked like a giant monkey was a funny discovery, which lifted the spirits of the hikers and gave them an energy boost.
Block Party Celebrity

Reading Passages: Close Reading (Grade 5) © Scholastic Inc.

Recently moved in and eager to meet their neighbors, the Guerrero family had a great idea. They would serve Rosa’s delicious elote, a favorite savory dip made with corn and cheese, at the block party.

They set up their table in front of their house, located at the quiet end of the block, far from the busy avenue. The family was in a jovial mood as they set up aluminum trays of elote, tortilla chips, plastic bowls, forks, and napkins.

Despite the appealing aroma of corn, few people strolled over, distracted by temptations elsewhere on the block. With few neighbors to serve, Ms. Guerrero permitted Yimi and Luisa to explore. When they returned, ice creams in hand, a commotion grabbed their attention. It was the town’s mayor, Elena Carillo-Lopez, and her entourage. The mayor stopped first at their table, smiling warmly as Luisa heaped elote into a bowl, added some chips, a fork, and served it with a napkin.

“Holy guacamole, your elote is the best!” the mayor exclaimed, glowing with each mouthful. Rosa blushed, saying, “Gracias, señora.”

Well, that did it. It seemed now that everybody also made a bee-line to the Guerrero table for their delicious elote. For the Guerreros, the feeling of being newcomers no longer.

Medieval Festival

Reading Passages: Close Reading (Grade 5) © Scholastic Inc.

Driving to the Medieval Festival, Mom sang old folksongs while Gavin studied the long list of events. There would be sword classes, blacksmithing, acrobats, dancers, jesters, and more, but it was jousting that was his top priority.

When the two entered the festival grounds, a whirl of sights, sounds, and smells overwhelmed them. Sheep and goats grazed beside horses and males. The scent of fresh cider perfumed the air while strolling jugglers and musicians entertained the crowds. As Gavin pulled Mom toward the jousting field, he was so busy gawking that he tripped and fell. When he arose, his mother was gone and his body felt unusually heavy. Yikes! He was wearing a full suit of armor!

“Sir, your steed awaits!” announced a man in a cloak, directing Gavin toward the stable. Too stunned to protest, Gavin clanked along, flailing under the armor’s weight.

“I think you’re mistaken,” Gavin sputtered.

“No sir!” replied the squire. “Queen Mab commands you to replace Sir Harry, who broke his arm yesterday. Ride proudly to honor her!”

Gavin gulped, feeling equally confused and thrilled at this crazy turn of events.

He’d wanted to see a joust, but to actually participate in one? Zounds! The squire pointed out the jousting field and gave him a small item. Huh?

The squire pointed at Gavin and his horse into position and handed him the long pole. Action the field was his fierce opponent, fully armored and ready...

1. C; Sample answer: I picked C because this is the most logical choice.

2. A; Sample answer: I picked A because I pictured Gavin trying to take in all the sights and not paying attention, which is probably why he tripped.

3. Sample answer: The story starts out in the present, with Gavin and his mom attending a Medieval Festival. But his fall seems to cause him to travel back into medieval times, where he isn’t a kid but is suddenly a knight jousting for his queen.

4. Sample answer: Although Gavin was interested in seeing a joust performed, it’s a completely different experience to actually participate in such a dangerous and fierce physical competition.
Painted Sneakers

1. Packing my van by 7 am gives me time to get to the lake for this autumn's crafts market. The winding drive will be lovely, as will the reunion with my fellow craftpeople, folks I see once a year.

2. Before coffee and donuts, I set up my booth. I assemble the lightweight aluminum poles that frame my protective canopy. After all, the market takes place come rain or shine. I set up my tables and racks to hold my one-of-a-kind, hand-painted sneakers. I put my most popular superhero sneakers—but rarely feel tired. Most shoppers are friendly and curious, which encourages me to tell more about my work. Occasionally, I slip away for a quick snack. Once in a while, I even sit in the lake for this autumn's crafts market. The winding drive will be lovely, as will the reunions with my fellow craftpeople, folks I see once a year.

3. After that, I set out an album showing all my designs for customers to flip through, and a sign-up book for people who want to get on my mailing list. Customers start arriving by 11 am, so everything must be ready. My task is to activate and test my wi-fi payment machine so I can accept cash and credit cards. At that point, my sneakers and I are prepared for the market to open.

4. I stand most of the day—wearing my favorite sneakers—but rarely feel tired. Most shoppers are friendly and curious, which encourages me to tell more about my work. Occasionally, I slip away for a quick snack. Once in a while, I even sit in the lake for this autumn's crafts market. The winding drive will be lovely, as will the reunions with my fellow craftpeople, folks I see once a year.

The Relief Pitcher

Read the sports story. Then follow the directions in the Text Marking box.

1. Wilson is clearly in trouble—he has walked two batters in a row, has been taking too much time between pitches, and looks weary. Recognizing this, the team's manager and pitching coach exchange worried glances and confer softly. The coach picks up the phone in the dugout and bullpen.

2. Next there is action in the bullpen behind left field. Two pitchers, a righty and a lefty, get up. After doing a series of gentle stretches, each hurler grabs his glove, stands on a mound, and begins to toss the ball softly to his catcher. After briefly warming up, both relievers start throwing harder, expecting that one of them will soon be called into the game.

3. Then there is more trouble for Wilson. Another walk draws the manager from his perch by the dugout railing. It's had enough. On his way to the mound, he waves his left hand, signaling the bullpen. Seeing this, the lefty stops throwing, opens the bullpen gate, and jogs to the mound to replace Wilson.

4. When the manager reaches the mound, he takes the ball from the struggling pitcher, who leaves the field with his head down. The manager greets the incoming reliever, and gives him the ball and some encouragement. "This is the bullpen, buddy," the manager tells him, "this is the bullpen."

5. The relief pitcher leaves home by 7 am in order to get ready for the customers who will show up by 4 hours later. The market ends by 6, so I'm guessing it will take a similar amount of time to pack up as it did to set up, plus driving time. So the painter will probably get home around 10 PM.
Passage 11: Krishna’s Lesson

With supreme calm, grace, and power, Krishna lifted Govardhan into the air using only the little finger of his left hand. He steadfastly held the mountain like an umbrella, protecting Vrindavan for seven stormy days and nights. Through his steadfast protection, Krishna demonstrated his wisdom and compassion, both to the people of Vrindavan and to Indra, who had caused the storm. This lesson taught the people that they should not be afraid of the rain and wind, but should trust in Krishna’s protection.

Passage 12: Talent Show Contest

Ms. Spira, the music teacher, was nearly finished auditioning hopefuls for the upcoming talent show. She announced to the two remaining candidates that there was just one spot left to fill. Kai, a gifted pianist, dreamed of becoming a professional musician and wanted this opportunity to perform. Though each hoped desperately to be selected, that seemed impossible now, with only two more try-outs for one opening.

Mr. Tameka moved beside Tameka. "I know you're an awesome dancer, and you know I'm great on the piano. Too bad we've got to battle each other," he whispered.

"Oh, that's kind to say. But one of us is simply going to be disappointed," Tameka answered.

Kai asked, "What music are you dancing to?"

Tameka replied that she planned to dance to the hit, "Sweet, Fleet Feet." Kai originally planned to play a classical waltz by Frederic Chopin. But he also knew "Sweet, Fleet Feet" and could play it energetically, so he suggested something to Tameka that made her grin.

"But both of us—we've become a team!" they responded. The friends chattered as they went onto the stage. "May we please have a few moments to warm up?" Tameka politely asked.

4. Sample answer: The being Pangu grew inside the egg of chaos for 18,000 years, along with all the yin and yang of the universe. When he broke out of the egg, yin and yang formed earth and sky. When he died, parts of his body turned into parts of earth and sky.

Passage 20: Febold Feboldson's Find

Text Marking

1. Sample answer: I picked A because it is the most sensible answer, based on the story.

2. Sample answer: I picked C because the other three words are synonyms for being very wet.

3. Sample answer: Febold Feboldson's crops grew in such a way that, during the Year of Striped Weather, the popcorn ball invented itself, and he found the first one ever on his farm.

4. Sample answer: I think that since this is a tall tale, the whole idea of the popcorn ball inventing itself is outlandish. Then, to have it devoured means there's no proof that it ever existed, except as a wild yarn.
