Karen Cator to Headline SIIA Ed Tech Business Forum

Former Apple executive, now head of federal ed tech initiatives, to keynote conference

Washington, D.C. (Nov. 5, 2009) – The Education Division of the Software & Information Industry Association (SIIA) today announces that Karen Cator, the new director of the Office of Education Technology at the U.S. Department of Education, will serve as its featured keynote speaker during a special lunch presentation at the Ed Tech Business Forum. The conference will be held Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, 2009, in New York.

Cator was previously director of education leadership and advocacy at Apple, Inc., responsible for the company's Distinguished Educator Program, professional development initiatives, and teaching and learning content on the Apple Learning Interchange. In her new role, Cator will lead the implementation of research, policymaking and leadership initiatives to support the advancement of technology development and use in education. Cator is past chair of the Partnership for 21st Century Skills, and has previously served on the board of directors of the SIIA Education Division.

"We are thrilled to have such an amazing leader and advocate leading the way at the Department of Education," said Karen Billings, Vice President of the SIIA Education Division. "Having her participate in the Ed Tech Business Forum as a keynote speaker will add value to the event, and shine a light on the critical importance of technology in the 21st century classroom."

The Ed Tech Business Forum is the nation's foremost executive event for the education technology industry. Leaders from top organizations will share their experiences in conducting business in a global market. In addition, the program will focus on the economic landscape for companies looking at financing options now as well as future growth opportunities.
