

1. INFO Local -- takes the issues and action to specific locations—and specific groups. It's there where like-minded peers can congregate and problem-solve.

While SIPA can do many things from its home office—plan conferences, publish research reports and thought provoking articles, set up webinars, etc.—it cannot simulate the driving force of members getting together in one room. And because locations present specific challenges and regulations to deal with, local groups can focus on what's important in that place at that time.

2. Listserv -- Members can sign up for SIPA Online Communities here and access archived discussions. Post a question to the group, and get real-time answers and advice from others who have grappled with and solved the same issues. Post a comment to start discussion and get feedback on new ideas.
